

By the King.

N calling to our Princely remembrance, that in the late Rebellion vpon pretence of Depopulation and unlawfull Inclosures, the greatest number of the offenders haue not bee[n] proceeded with according to Justice and their traitorous deseruings, no nor so much as apprehended or touched for the same, although they bee in no better case or degree, then those few which haue suffered or bee[n] called in question: There want not some reasons and circumstances which (if wee would consult c[on]cilely with policie or passion) mought induce vs to further severitie, and a more generall execution of the Law vpon the same offenders. For wee are not ignorant, that of all other seditions and rebellions, none doth bring such infinite waste and desolation vpon a Kingdome or State, as these popular Insurrections, which though they doe seldom shake or indanger a Crowne, yet they doe bring a heape of calamities vpon multitudes of innocent Subiects, and chiefly vpon the Autho[r]s and Acte[r]s themselves.

And agayne, wee doe obserue, that there was not so much as any necessarie of famine or dearth of corne, or any other extraordinary accident, that might stirre or prouoke them in that maner to offend; but that it may be thought to proceede of a kinde of insolencie and contempt of our milde and gracious Government, which mought (in some Prince) turne the same into more heauy wrath and displeasure. But we neuerthelesse having at the very entrance of our Raigne, in the highest treasons against our owne Person, intermingled Mercie with iustice, are much more inclined in this case, which concerneth a number of poore & simple people, to extend our naturall clemencie towards them. Wherupon we haue resolued to set wide open the gate of our Mercie vnto them, and to bestowe vpon them our free Grace and Pardon, without further Suite or Supplication.

And therefore we doe hereby take and receiu[e] all the sayd Offenders, and every of them, to our Mercie, and of our Grace and meere motion, freely pardon vnto them their sayd Offences, and all paines of Death or other punishment due for the same, and promise vnto them, in the word of their naturall Liege Lord and King, that they shall not be in any wise molested or impeached, in Life, Member, Lands or Goods for their sayd Offences, or any of them. So as neuerthelesse, that before Michaelmas next they doe submit themselves, and acknowledge their sayd Offences before our Lieutenant, Deputie Lieutenant, or Sheriffe in the Countie where they shall remaine, wherof wee will and command a Note or Entric to be made and kept.

And we are further graciously pleased, that if any of them severally or jointly shal desire for their better assurance, to haue our Pardon vnder our great Seale, that our Chancello[r] shal make the same vnto them without further warrant in that behalfe. Not intending neuerthelesse to prouide any our Subiects p[ro]tivate Suite or Action, but so much as in tas is, absolutely to acquire & discharge them against tas, our Heires & Successors.

Giuen at our Castle of Windsor the 24. day of July, in the fifth yeere of our Reigne of Great Britaine, France and Ireland.

God sau[e] the King.
